1973. The design that year, a stylised post horn, was made by the Norwegian artist Leif Frimann Anisdahl (24 countries ; 51 stamps). The 3 arrows are said to represent CEPT's primary objectives: posts, telgraphs and telephone services. 1973 was the last year the common design was used. The next year a common theme will be introduced to make the collection more attractive and more interesting.

1974 was an important year for the Europa stamps collection, because since then, a common theme replaced the common design system used since 1956. Only the CEPT logo (or letters) on each stamp indicates that the stamp is a "Europa stamp". That year, the first theme to be chosen was sculptures (23 countries, 49 stamps).

In 1975 the theme was paintings (24 countries, 50 stamps). It was also the first Europa issue of the Turkish part of Cyprus. Due to the political situation on the island of Cyprus, the stamps issued by the Turkish part of the island are not recognized on an international level. Even if those stamps bear the Europa logo, they are not official Europa stamps but most of the Europa stamps collectors collect them as they issue Europa stamps on a regular basis since 1975.

In 1979 (31 countries, 68 stamps) the theme was postal history. The Faroe Islands and Gibraltar are taking part since that year. Gibraltar is in fact not a CEPT member but issues each year 4 stamps on the same topic as the Europa stamps but without the official logo. As they are a British colony on European soil those issues were always tolerated.

1979 is also the year that the first elections for the European Parliament were held. Several countries have issued a stamp commemorating this event but none were Europa stamps.
